

Sergei Guriev

Provost,
Sciences Po, Paris

Impact of politics and geopolitics on the global economy

Recent research in political economy has studied economic impacts of populist and non-democratic governance, as well as of conflicts and sanctions. Using various state-of-the-art empirical methodologies, the literature has shown that populists in power cause reduction in economic growth, democratisations improve economic growth, and both conflicts and sanctions undermine economic performance.